

<h1>Robb Report</h1>	September 27, 2021 Online Visits: 2,081,000 Click to view article online
	September 27, 2021 Online Visits: 217,200,000 Click to view article online
	September 27, 2021 Online Visits: 469,000,000 Click to view article online
	September 27, 2021 Online Visits: 4,218,000 Click to view article online
	September 27, 2021 Online Visits: 4,844,000 Click to view article online
Open Source Info  Verified News Explorer Network	September 28, 2021 Online Visits: 641,377 Click to view article online

11 Outstanding New White Wines That Are Perfect for Drinking This Fall

You don't have to switch entirely to reds just yet.

This is the time of year for that great annual migration—from white wine to red. Temps are dipping, fireplaces are crackling to life and there's a roast chicken in the oven for the first time since March. Bigger, richer wine is called for.

But, but, but ... white wine lovers of the world, don't yield ground! You might not want your wine to be as searingly crisp as the fall day, but there are unlimited delicious ways to get around that in the universe of white wines. Take Sauvignon Blanc, for instance. Instead of a lean and steely, stainless-fermented version, find one that's been filled out a little with some oak treatment and/or plumped up with a splash of Sémillon, à la white Bordeaux. Or explore the fascinating, so-called "alternative whites" in cutting-edge shops (alternative to what?) that are bright, dry and mouth-filling all at once—Chenin Blanc, Gewürztraminer. Almost the most satisfying of all this time of year is the Rhône family: Roussanne, Marsanne, Viognier—varieties that are inherently a little fat.

These are the bottles to break out when good sausages anchor the menu, pork shoulder is bubbling in your slow cooker or there's a well-seasoned chicken roasting in the oven.

TRENTODOC

Castello del Terriccio 2020 Con Vento Toscana IGT

Literally translated as “with wind,” the name of Castello del Terriccio’s terrific blend of Viognier and Sauvignon Blanc was taken from Collina del Vento, or “hill of the wind.” The wine’s aromas are rich and bracing at the same time, combining ocean salinity with white stone fruit, lemongrass and fresh herbs. Bright citrus drives the palate, with grapefruit puckering up riper lemon. Tension and verve carry through a long, minerally finish.

BUY NOW: $46

TRENTODOC

CULTIVATE YOUR MESSAGE